- Private student loans contrast from Title IV, HEA loans by:
 - When payments are due: Payments for Federal student loans is due 6 months after you graduate or drop below half time, while private student loans may require payment while you are in school.
 - Interest Rates: The interest rates on Federal Student loans is fixed, while private student loans may be variable or fixed and their interest rates may be lower or higher than federal loans depending on the individual circumstances of the student.
 - Subsidies: Students with financial need may qualify for a federal student loan for which the government pays the interest at least half time and during certain other periods. This type of loan is called a subsidized loan. Private student loans are often not subsidized and you will be responsible for all the interest on your loan.
 - Credit Check: You don't need a credit check to qualify for federal student loans (except for Parent PLUS loans). Private student loans, however, may require a credit history or a cosigner.
 - Tax Benefits: Interest on Federal student loans may be tax deductible, although in some occasions the interest on a private loan may be as well. This depends on the circumstances of the loan.
 - Consolidation and Refinancing: Loans can be consolidated into a Direct Consolidation Loan, but private student loans may not. However, private student loans can be refinanced.
 - Postponement Options: Federal student loans have options to temporarily postpone or lower your payments. In the case of private student loans this may vary by lender.
 - Repayment Plans: For Federal student loans there are several repayment plans including plans that tie your monthly payment to your income. Private loans repayment plans may vary by lender.
 - Prepayment penalty: There are no prepayment penalty fees for Federal student loans, but private lenders may vary in their practices.
 - Loan Forgiveness: You could be eligible to have some portion of your loans forgiven if you work in public service. Although many private lenders do not offer loan forgiveness programs, some student loans from state agencies can be forgiven in certain circumstances.¹
